“ Hello. My name is Cheryl and I was Christopher's therapist at Lookout. My heart hurts for all of you. I learned a lot from Chris (especially about shoes). His aunties were so dedicated to him and he was so blessed to have their support and love. Since leaving lookout I often asked ex colleagues about him and I prayed for him wishing I could still help him. He was a a wise special human. He fought and fought demons and I feel honored to have known him. He is resting now and being held. I am so so sorry.

“ Cheryl Perez...I didn't know Chris wish I did just by reading his obituary. Seems like he didnt have close parents whatever the case may be . I could of also been a big brother or father to him. I know what its like having inner demons I fought with them from my early 50's . I learned to adapt to them . Somewhat looking at it as facing the demons as if thier telling you to face up to whats causing it and integrating and possibly seeing them as,them how would I say, them making you to fix your past life conflicts. Also somewhat making friends with them as helping you cope . I am now in my early 70's and I dont let them take over me. Its the people I have trouble with . But I love myself and let my conscience be my guide . I dont know you either . I just want to say your a wonderful person for pouring your heart out to people that need it the most . Reading obituaries is part of my personal therapy..... Bless Christopher and his aunties.
